He is left to the mercy of winds and waves, He is left to the marky or wisses and wavel, And the rolling tempest that mund him raws, and foams and howls in angey breath, and the liquid shadows of death, Assid the isquise nancows or users, The labouring bark sinks down the wave, As seeking the ocean's darkest cave, Where the raging tempest may never come; Where sea-howers find a sunless home, And where beneath the mountain's form, A moment she's shetter'd from the storm, From whence she springs to the billow's top, Where the clouds appear her course to stop, Where lightnings blazing—Rashing fast, With frey curis enwreach the mast, ginning on the spray among, ims and hisses the spray among, d the rolling billows seem blasing bright With fames to lighten the brow of night, And shakes in air the quivering harge, to the thunders ocho the deaf'ning charge,

And hough: and form along, as both That dash and form along, as both To forget their late contending wrath. The thunders have ceased the deal'ning war, And silently slumber in scenes afar; The clouds have gone, and the lightning's ray, And the witth in silence have died away, And soft repose, tired Nature's balm, New sleeps beneath the moon beam calm,

But where is the hark with it: lonely freight, But hit safely braved a stormy (are, Or both it sunk beneath the surge, With its sullen howl for a funeral diege; Shall the exile sufferer hear no more An angry judge—nor the tempest's roar; He bath view'd the storm with a soul resign'd, With his thoughts and hopes to Hea en consign'd; The hillows have roll'd, but he fear'd them not, Bis penis and troubles were all ferget;
Purks call'd on his God when danger was near,
and the God of the friendless bath deigned to hear—his o'er the waters, and through the gale, she sped the bark with the silken sail.

And hast thou fled-torever fled, Without one word or kind adieu? Fondly I thought again to tread, The flow'ry maze with joy and you.

Why hast thou thus my love repaid,
Why left me thus to mourn and sigh;
O tell me—is there aught I've said
Or done, that caus'd thy cruelty?

Ah, no! thou can'st not, dare not say. I ever gave thee just offence; My heart, too true e'en to this day, Bevotes to thee its ev'ry sense.

Well didst thou know my all was thinc, Too sure thy victim was thy own; ligh in vain, and weep and moan.

Hadst thou one spark of honour left, Did truth within thy bosom glow-Or in thy heart did purely flow-

SABBATH MEDITATIONS.

The passions and principles of the human mind infinitely various; yet they may all be combind within two general divisions—Affection and lawledge. These principles, however, though by the human mind, are not created bik it, nor are they indeed created, at any time, two faculties have been created in many for a purpose of receiving the uncreate principles of affection and annualed as these faculties are and knowledge; these faculties are will and Understanding, the former as a le of Affection : the latter as a receptacle go or Wastern. How these two faculty rising generation. I admire biography, whether which I discovered to be her splendid residence.

ties may be united, or they may be separated from long or short, provided it is kept tree from extraeach other; as for example-We may act from blind affection only, and know at the same time that the act is wrong ;-this is an act of the will, separate from the understanding; again, we may know what is correct, and for various reasons act accordingly, while our affection may stand in violent opposition : here again the two principles are at variance,-But we are happy to know, that these principles may be so closely united by Religion, as to form but one impulse to action. is the case, we are always successful, in our pursuit after Truth. The Will animates the Understanding while seeking Wisdom, and the Understanding makes itself the medium through which the various knowledges it has access to are conveyed to the Will; a pleasing reciprocity takes place-the Will imparts life to the Understanding, and the Understanding gives Wisdom to the Will. This happy union, produces a good life, and man is brought into a state of heavenly order, replete with sacred peace, and divine consolation

God is the Author of every good and perfec gift-the Source of all life, light and happiness .-From Him, Divine Love, and Divine Wisdom, con tinually proceed, and in proportion as they are received into the Will and Understanding, man i Regenerated ;-this reception can, however, only take place with those, who hunger and thirst after Rightenusness-who " put away the evil of their doings," and thus open the door of their Understanding, for the admission of the Lord their Sa-

In reviewing these observations, we shall be led to consider how admirably man is calculated to become an image, and likeness of his Creator; for in the Deity, there is a Divine Trinity, of proceeding Principles, and in man a Trinity of receptive Faculties; the former are termed, Love, Wisdom, and Operation, or, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; the latter are denominated, Will, Understanding, and Action, which when vivified and enlightened by the Lord, produce Charity, Paith, and Good Works. May we therefore diligently search the Sacred Scriptures, and endeavour rationally to know the Truth, as it is in Jesus;" may we shun all evils, whether of thought, word, or deed; and above all. may we acknowledge and worship the Lord Jesus Christ, as "the Only Wise God our Saviour," for 'He has all Power in Heaven and in Earth," and "in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

" Oh happiness? our being's end and aim."

That man in every stage of existence is addict ed to pleasure, is an axiom never successfully controverted. The votaries of fashion and dissipation and the philosophic sage, pursue it with equal avidity, and as the author of the universe has endowed him with faculties extremely susceptible of pleasurable sensations, it is the privilege of every one to seek such amusements only as are adapted to his own disposition, and to avoid every thing that has a tendency to produce pain. The plea sures of sense are transitory and evanescent in their nature, and have a direct tendency to debase the heart-they confine our hopes and desires to the narrow circle of temporary enjoyments, and render torpid the most exalted and pleasing excitements of the soul.

The exercise of the faculties in literary pur suits is grateful and ennobling to the mind, is a rational entertainment and a powerful preventative from vice, as it strengthens and invigorates the mental powers, and whatever tends to increase the predominance of reason over sensual pleasures, is favourable to the cause of virtue and re ligion. For amid all the varieties of even innocent amusements and pleasures surrounded by all that can satisfy and enlighten the understanding, it must be confessed that religion alone diffuses over the mind that calmness and serenity which proceeds from a knowledge of the benevolence and mercy of the Deity and a perfect dependence him.

POR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

The distinctions which are conferred by success in the martial field or the forum, are not the only kind of celebrity which has been interesting. Dr Rush when philosophising upon the excentricities of the human character, and detailing the virtues of Benezet, and the singularities of Lay and Drinker, accidentally became acquainted with the history of an obscure woman named Cary Wood, from which he has furnished some valuable information concerning a person who otherwise would not have obtained a place in human annals, beyand those family records which we often notice in old Bibles and other religious volumes. These brief records of the introduction of individuals upon the stage of existence and of their departure off of it, have often excited a serious reflection how ages pass away-and are interesting to a mind, that, like the philosopher Daniel Arney's, is every where and in all things instructed. Some writer mentions, that there is scarcely the life of an individual, but what, were it written in detail, would furnish some valuable information. The most insipid production of this kind, that has ever came within my observation, corresponds with this idea. I have never met with a biographical sketch that was totally void of interesting matter, and with very few that did not contain more or less that might well be spared When a great man dies, his admirers furnish the world with a history of his progress through time; much of it indeed, not of that kind which has had a tendency to make us happier or better, except as we are disposed to derive instruction by avoiding those evils which are portrayed not for our imitation but for the same purpose as the ancients are said to have exhibited a drunkard to the view of the neous matter. A man who has performed many singular acts, claims more than he that has done little out of the ordinary course of eating, drinking, sleeping and labour. But there is scarcely a man who never felt an inclination after distinction above his fellows. I knew a labourer who appeared to calculate with as much satisfaction upon the extension of his fame to future generations by car. rying a heavy load upon his shoulder at the cree tion of a building, as a General might, when victorious in the field of battle : another man I knew who, when about to erect a new barn, observed he wanted to do something to be talked about when he was gone. It is all well—the love of fame is the last infirmity of noble minds. But while the love of fame, and the means to procure it, are confined to works of utility like as in the above instances, we are not at liberty to throw any obstructions in its way. Let Washington and Franklin, and Rush and Rittenhouse, move in the high orders for which they were furnished with wisdom and understanding-all the humbler grades may follow on, each occupying that station in which he is qualified to do well, down to the cheerful plough-boy who strikes his furrows the nearest way across the fields, and the waggener with hi team, well instructed and judiciously managed for the dispatch of business, without abuse or oppression upon the inferior orders of creation-and the sailor dexterous at halyards or helm, giving facility to trade and uniting the nations of the earth in harmonipus intercourse. I would not praise the base and discordant; for the business of religion-of philanthropy-of patriotism-of philosophy-and of the sciences and arts-is to promote the welfare, the accommodation and happiness of the human family.

FOR THE SATCHDAY EVENING POST. I am a constant reader of your entertaining paper, and rarely fail of receiving much gratification from its weekly perusal. I have been particularly pleased of late with the original letters of your correspondent. Edward," in whose animated and easy style, I trace the manner of an accomplished epistolary writer. I cannot forbear congratulating your readers on this accession to their Saturday Evening entertainment, and hope that Edward will, not soon cease his acceptable communications. His letter contained in your last number, was enriched with some anecdotes of a local nature, belonging to the history of our city. local nature, belonging to the history of our city, which I confess are new to me, although an old resident. Your correspondent adopts the rule which I confess are new to me, although an old resident. Your correspondent adopts the rule laid down by Cowper, and which ought to be observed by all those who would acquire an easy style, viz. "to write precisely in the same manner in which they converse." This u suffected style, I believe to be peculiarly adapted to those simple tales which readily interest the best feelings of the heart. It is to be thoped that "Edward" will engage his fancy in the composition of similar pieces to those which obtain for the English and Scotch journals the celebrity they enjoy, particularly in the manner of those beautiful offsprings of genius which have enriebed the pages of Blackwood. Such sketches from nature cannot fail of deeply engaging the attention, and of

FOR THE SATURDAY EVERING POST,

THE PRIDER.

During a visit to Prance it the summer of 1819, was in the frequent habit of avoiding the din and business of Paris, by a second the adjacent country; and being the solitary occupant of a fashionable and yet comfortable toupie, (a vehicle sembling our gigs.) used to indulge myself in driving past the numerous country seats in the vicinity of the great French capital.

It was on one of these excursions, as I was re turning to the city on the most delightful day I had experienced any where on the continent, that, whilst I was adm ring the beautiful grounds of the elegant female running towards me with great trepidation and alarm. I leaped out of my gig, and as soon as I had touched the ground she threw herself, or rather fell into my arms with the exclamation in Prench "O save me, save me!" and hung senseless in that situation. No danger being apparent, I willingly turned my at tention to the lovely girl, whom I was embracing -for that was really our attitude. She appeared to be about the age of seventeen; terror had chased the roses from her cheeks, but her countenance was the sweetest and most perfectly beautitui I had ever seen. A few flowers were care lessly placed in her hair, her dress was of the most engaging kind, and it seemed as if she had strolled from the house and ornamented her tresses with the flowers plucked as she passed along. In short the combination of the romantie adventure, the beauty and delicate situation of the awooning girl and the whole scene raised me to a pitch of sensation I never had felt. I sat on the bank with her on my lap; she revived before I had time to use any method of restoring her, and indeed, I am ashamed to say, solicitous as I was for her safety I wished that I could always have so sat. But how else could a young man of twenty-one feel? clasping to his breast a beautiful fair one in distress, gazing without an obstacle on her charms, and these feelings elevated by the evident rank and worth of her whom he supported. Discovering the situation into which she had un consciously thrown herself in her alarm, she sprang from me, averting her face to hide the modest blushes that suffused it. Sie attempted to explain-to thank me, but she was not sufficiently recovered from her fright, to convey her sentiments as she wished. Her weakness and her fear obliged her to accept my offer of conveying her home in my lougie. She directed me to turn in at the park gate of the Chateau a la maison, where he had been sitting and came to meet us. He appeared to be a man of about sixty, of sickly nance, but his mien and gait showed that in spite of premature infirmity, he retained some thing, if not of the vigor, yet beauty of middle age. To the first question concerning what had happened, her only reply was " Le R- again!" Hearing this the father's countenance was indica ive of starm which was soon succeeded by indignation. He however composed himself sufficient ly to thank me cordially for the service I had done him, in rescuing his Marie; and the levely maid herself, with the loveliest smile and brightened, keen darting eyes, expressed her gratitude for my timels resoue. Though I was kept in the dark concerning the cause of her sharm, I did not feel the curiosity, the same recurrence under fore waived all inquiry and gladly accepted the old gentleman's invitation to survey his grounds, and above all, pleading his own inability, requested Marie to act as Cicerone to her " deliverer," as he cailed me, although I was not conscious of having done any thing to deserve even his thanks. Perhaps I flattered myself too much, but I hought she accepted the commission with very great pleasure, and took great pains to perform her part well. The little walk we enjoyed proved that Marie possessed the vivacity common to her nation, but I thought her conversation, though little more than chat, was more interesting both as to matter and expression than I had ever found before in any female. But to particularize furthe on this promenade and introductory visit, would not be a agreeable to the reader as they are to the writer, let it therefore be sufficient to say, that after a most delightful visit I quitted my grateful friends, with resterated promises that I would frequently repeat my calls. The adventure was of itself, sufficient, simply considered to fill up all my musings, but the beauty and ac complishments of Maric, the grace of her form her attitude when she fainted in my arms, the lovely smile, and blush -oh! my thoughts ran wild, but under her mild discipline they soon so bered down into that placid but no less real enjoyment which is the result of earnest affection-

The Chateau now became my daily resort. ound the sweet Marie every time sweeter and more attentive; ber eyes sparkled as she smiled when she saw me enter the avenue, or struck with a stronger hand the strings of her guitar, at the well known sound of my cabriolet.

But why enter further into detail? Marie now sits beside me, with her lovely arms around my neck, smiling at my praise But the reader should know something of her history.

Her father is a widower, and she the younges of several children who were all married. He beauty, wealth and virtues made her the eynosure of Paris, and her alliance was sought by many confident but unsuccessful sultors. Amongst these was Le R-, who with desires unworthy of a man, sought her friendship. Though his family was noble, his person bandsome, and his manners agreeable, his character-not notorious ly dissolute-partook of that gambling, frolicking, low spirit, which makes a man despicable in the eyes of a good and virtuous female. On the day of my adventure, he for the second time soug t her in her favourite retirement, and had proceeded to language brutaliy insolent, and had cowardly drawn his sword with threats-the terrified ingocent flew to the public road, and was there suc coured, as I have detailed. The father promoted our union with all his influence. Marie loved me. was devoted to me. As to myself I enjoyed at the bless without the uncasiness of a lover; our spirits were so congenial, our love so ardent and so pure, that I thought nothing could prevent my happiness. Occur marriage she consented to refluently, though I love to hear her French. 'Twas that in which the words were conveyed which made me happy, and are thus consecrated to me. We delight to trace these acenes, and often-often do we mutually express our joy and gratitude for the accident which first brought me acquainted with the estimable inhabitants of the Chateau de

A SERENADE. Friendship's balmy words may feign,

Love's are e'en more false than they;
Oh! 'tis only music's strain
Can sweetly southe, and not betray!"—Moore.

There is a willinge a few miles west from the metropoles of our of the states in the Union, remarkable for its neatness and beauty, and distinguished for the picture-que appearance of the surrounding scenery. It was here, on a serein night of June, when all nature seemed to be hushed in calm repose, and the full orbed moon had measured more than half the full orbed moon had measured more than half measured more had measured more than half her course through the silvered skies, that the soft notes of distant music fell upon the histening ear. The clearness and serenity of the air, and the quietness of the hour, redoubled the meladionaneas of the music and made it produce the more pleasing effects.—
The youth of the village were visiting the mistresses of their hearts, to dispel, by the powers of music, their disturbed slumbers and unpleasant

When concluding the settine, a window was gently raised, by Evelect as it was supposed, for they judged only by it expectations. Egbert Wertland, who had appeal over solucitons, and had exerted all his post in the performance of the music, stepped forw bow-d and kissed his hand. His salutation instantly acknowledged by the waving of a sakerchief from the window. He then joined companions, with that indescribable sensation felocity which arises from the assurance of processed love. They performed a few more propriate airs, and silently departed to pour fether last nocturnal strains to Helen Montrills, only favourite of the youthful band who had been serended.

only favourite of the youthful band who had obeen serenaded.

The house of Dr. Montville is situated at short distance from Mr. Ralaton's, on the opposite side of the street. It is so completely controlled with tall poplars and gracefully buring cims, that no part of it can be seen by the apocation tall he arrives almost under the plazza. Agravel walk, with thick shady trees on eitherside, encircles the house and continues its used dering course through an extensive garden on the nouth. It was necessary for the musicians a stand either on the plazza or this gravel walk. In both places their view of the upper windows would be intercepted, and the effects of the meaning the greatly diminished. The lattac was however, thought the most proper and conveniently have been also used they approached cautiously to avail does urbing the inhabitants by any discordant sounds—even the latch was raised and the gastwars opened slowly, and with the greatest care, to preven the creaking of the iron. They performed the usual number of tunes, but no acknowledgment was male—so window was raised—no handkerchief was waved. All turned to ards the gate to depart but flumy finburn—he looked, he listened; once he thought he caught the glimpse of a signal; once he heard or imagined he heard the sound of a finale voice. But when he perceived he was alone, and saw his companions aiready in the street, he rejuctantly turned and followed; but his attention was some arrested by the notes of that soft and southing voice which he had so often listened to with rapture. When he distinguished the lines he had formerly selected for flelen, and which they had frequently channed together, an association of the most pleasing thoughts passed through too mind with the celerity of the electric shock, and he unconsciously moved towards the place.

As a beam ofer the face of the waters may While the tide runs is durkness and coldness below, so the check may be time'd with a warm sunny smile Though the cold heart to ruin runs darkly the while,

When the last echo of her voice was wafted om his ears on the gentle breeze, he responded

"Good night, good night, and is it so? And must I from my Helen go?

And must I from my Helen go!" Cre.

Thus ended the Serenade, and Henry joined his waiting companions. The shrill voice of Gallus, who is more watchful for mo ern lovers than he was for those of ancient days, warned the youthful band, that day was fast approaching. They wished each other sweet rest and pleasing dreams, and separated. The graiffication which Egbert Wertland and Henry Froburn had experienced, the lost half four, had produced such tively sensations, that the deare of sleep was entirely banished, and coni-quently a walk was proposed. The objects or their love were, of course, the theme of conversation. But as the reader may be desirous of knowing a little more about them than barely their names, before he listens to their conversation, he shall be gratified with an account of their busices and standing in society.

usi ess and standing in society
Egbeit Wertland had been graduated at Colege, and had nearly completed a course of reading in law. The builtancy of his talents, and the a-adulty with which he cultivated them, gave his friends the most flattering hopes of his future eminence. The vulsgers esteemed him for his emmence. The voltagers estremed han for me general affability and regular deportment; and the lades were not the last to admire the grace-fulness of his person and the amusble qualities of his moud. The dottes of the office frequently his most. The duties of the office frequently prevented him from participating the amusements of their social evening parties, but whenever he could attend, his presence was greeted with smiles and he sity welcomes. At such times, evident signs of increased pleasure were depicted on the countenances of every one but Henry Finburn.—
fle was a clerk to the first merchout in the village. His pleasing address had gained him the favour of the ladies, which he enjoyed without alloy in the absence of Wertland. At every ball, at every party, either in the village, or at some hotel in a neighbouring towo, Henry F. took an active part, and gave life and energy to the company by an mexhaustible fund of wit, or by the fortility of his imagination, in contriving little artifices for their amusement. These two young generate men were on terms of the most intimate friendship. They spent much of their leisure together, themen were on terms of the most intimate friendship. They spent much of their leisure together, and their thoughts and conversation flowed harmonicusly on every subject, except that of the isdies. Then each advocated his superpar qualities for gaining this esteem, and each argued, that the attentions he received from them, proved him their greatest favourite. Therefore, for the perfect, enjoyment of orther themselves to the context of orther themselves. perfect enjoyment of enther in a party it became

As Egbert Wertland put his disjoined instrument into his pocker, and drew his outside garment tighter around him, he said to his compaoion, "Henry we can woo our livers to morrow as Spanish gallants, for I already feel the effects of the evening air on my "rogs".

"The felicity we have enjoyed this night," said Henry, "will amply repay us for our hourseness, even should it prevent us from speaking for a week. But Egbert how did you like H. ieu's voice?"

DISTURBANCES IN IRPLAND

Lannan, June 7.
Tipperary—which hitherto was tolerably free, is likely again to be disturbed. A cottage at New-Abbey was burnt to the ground last Sunday. A rot, of a serious nature, indeed—a sort of battle-took place at Newcastle, in this County, between the country people and a party of the police. It was occasioned by an attempt to distrain the lands of litchingfully for an arrear of rent, when a rescue was effected of all the cattle, by a mob of from two to three hundred persons, armed with pitchiotic bludgeon and grown to the forks, bludgeons and stones. Mr. Ryan had a party to the new Poince ready to proceed to the place, as he intended antecedent to the seizure, for the purpose of executing a Bench Warrant, and which accordingly they did execute, by apprehending three of the persons who stood charged with a previous rescue of the cattle, seized for the same rent. An attempt was also made to reacte these prisoners, but the poince resolutely maintained their captain, though outrageously beaten, and we have reason to believe wounded several of the insurgents. The moment the attempt was made to reacte the prisoners, a large party of the most actually seized Mr. W. Ryan as a business, and swore he should not be released until the prisoners were; but he was lucky assume to get of with one blow of a stant on the local course. forks, bludgeons and stones. On the 31st of May, Mina had taken refuge in Len d'Urgel, m two to three thousand men, according to the French official accounts; and the two disciled is, how he could thus suddenly have augmented his forces so much, and also where he could have encountered so large a French divi-tion, unless it was the main force of Moncey him elf. Courtship—An elegant writer has said, "that the period of our courtship is the happiest of our investigation or resistant." If this position be true, it is impossible not to admire the prudence of a couple lately married, who protracted this period of felicity for 24 years. That they should at lest think it necessary to unite the bands of wellock, is a striking proof that all human folicity must some time or other have an end.

AMERICAN CALICOES.—An establishment for printing Caiscoes will shortly be put in operation at Taunton, Massachusetts, which, when com-pleted, will be a valuable acquisition to Cotton Manufactures in that quarter. At Chelmsford, a Manufactures in that quarter. At Chelmsford, a large establishment of this description was put in operation a short time since. Cotton manufacturng is one of the principal branches of domestic in dustry in this state, and at this time requires every attention from those interested in it. The quantity of cotton goods now unsold is very large, and will probably increase before the fall sales commence. probably increase before the fall sales commence, consequently at that time, the sales will be very immed. Casicoes can be made in this country of a quality supersor to most of those made in, and imported from Europe, and can be not equally cheap. I should regret very much to learn that this state, which has always been considered a manufacturing state, should be the last to commence a new branch of manufacturing, that would give a certain market for a wast amount of cotton goods: I would therefore, propose to the cotton manufacturers to form a company for printing calicoes, and bleaching, which is a part of the process. The good effects will be immediately perceived from the increasing consumption of American goods.—Previous Company.

U. S. SHIP DECOY.

Letters from an officer of this ship to his friend in Bridgeton, (N. J.) state, that the fever which has proved so fatal on board of her, was occasioned by limestone ballast, collected at Cayo Huesso, in which was intermixed a quantity of snals, moss, and other animal and vegetable substances which had become putrid. In discharging the ballast at Crancy island, on a piece of rock weighing shout 10 ibs. were found seven putrified muscles. Two new cases of fever had occurred among the crew at Crancy island, one of which had proved fatal.—The ship was ordered, after discharging her old and taking in new ballast, to preceed to Washington.

The present number closes the second year of our editorial duties—we shall not pretend to urge our claims on the liberality of our patrons, as we have always found them ready and pleased to setthe with as whenever we called upon them for their dies; we are zealous only to deserve a continuation of that same free and generous support with which the public have distinguished us since our commencement. The distance between us and some of our friends in the country, precludes the possibility of hearing from them often, yet we lity of hearing from them request them not to forget us, for we frequentle find their communications more solid and enter taining than some which we receive from our respondents in the city.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICO.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICO.

By a gentleman lately arrived from Tampieh, it is stated that affairs in Mexico continued apparently tranquil, awaiting the determination of the Congress. It does not appear that furbide has left any party in the country. The Mexican population, although they commit no acts of hostility against the old Spaniards that still remain among them, are suspicious of their intentions and jealous of their influence with the clergy. LATEST FROM ENGLAND.

New-York, July 25.—The packet ship Nestor, captain Lee, arrived yesterday from Liverpool, by which we have received papers of the 16th dlt. and London papers to the evening of the 14th. They announce no new events of importance: those of the last date are principally filled with the proceedings of the great meeting held at the London Tavera, to consider of the best means of affording assistance to the Spaniards. means of affording assistance to the Spaniards. Lord William Bentinck presided. The sum of £-4,795 was subscribed. In the course of the proceedings, the editor of the London Sun came orward and stated that the false accounts relative to the affairs of Spain, which had appeared in the English papers, were prepared in Paris, and pro of that he had received overtures from Paris to publish such articles as should be fur-nished through the French embassy, at the rate of 500 francs per article. The editor of the Cou-rier ridicules the idea that the few thousands which may be subscribed, can aid Spain in her present difficulties. It is demonstrated beyond a question, says this paper, that nine-tenths of the people of Spain, are either indifferent or hostile to the Constitution—if it was not so, the Duke of Angouleme could not maintain himself in Spain, nor Moncey in catalonia, against the great population of that province.

Accounts from Puycerda, states that Mina, who was at Sen d'Urgel on the 4th, had made a rapid movement on the Bal-guer, and escaped from the French Generals, who thought they had made quite sure of him. An article from Perpignan, June 2, says news had been received from Barcelons, that General Manso had arrived in Upper Cat-alonia, and effected a junction with Mois, with 6000 men. It is added, that as soon as his arrival was known, a great military council was held a the head quarters of the 4th corps. He was one the head quarters of the 4th corps. He was one of the most active officers in the last peninsula war. He was originally a milier, who fired with indignation at his country's wrongs and smarting under personal ones, orgazized a guerilla party, which lecame very formulable. He still wears a portion of the miller's deess, which makes him popular among the peasantry.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT REPORT. A Spanish gentleman now in this city, has this norning received a letter from a friend of his at the Havana, a very respectable merchant of that city, Don Juan Perez Garcia, dated the 12th July, wherein he states, that by a vessel which had a very short passage from Cadiz, they had received official news, that the inhabitants of Madrid have spontaneously risen on the French, and after a furious contest, killed and wounded an immense number, and made 900 prisoners. Also, that Gen. Mina had thrice engaged the division of the French army operating in Catalonia, and as often repulsed and routed them with great loss on the side of the invaders. This letter further men-tions, that a vessel of war had entered the port of Havana from Martinique, bringing repositions from the authorities of the latter island inviting the Cubeans to join the French cause. The emissary who brought these propositions was an swered by the government and inhabitants of the Havana, with the utmost indignation, and with all the dignity becoming men determined to re-main firmly attached to their country's cause.— The vessel which brought the former account from Cadiz, only arrived at Havana the 11th July, one day previous to the date of the letter in question

TOR THE SATURDAY STRAIGH POST.

Many people about Bucklughum, in Bucks my, can remember old base Letch, who died twenty years ago. He was supposed to be leek twisted, yet was an inoffensive, harms kind of man, and though his mind appeared we no great variety of subjects upon which to occupy its powers, there were some wherein its strength was applied with a remarkable vigour y some means it had chalked out for him such so of religious duty, that no temptation the most attering to his favourite palate, could induce him to overleap the boundaries prescribed. His me ery on a few subjects was wonderfully reter tive. It was remarkable, that for a great many years, he was invariably as certain as an almana in designating the day of the month. On this stion he was never at a limit for an unswer and always correct. He had a strong relish to enting; it was perhaps his greatest weak no that in this case he sometimes went by n other guage than the complete destruction of all that was set before him, and rarely ever would acknowledge be had enough, only saying, "it "ill

THE EMPECINADO.

A life of Brigadier General Don Juan Martin, governily styled the Euro-chinado, with an account of his military operations, has recently been published. We have carracted the following descripon of his person.

" This extraordinary man is a little above the middle stature, with a firmly knit and muscular frame which indicates a capabiliby of sustaining privation and fatigue; his complexion is dark, his beard strong and of a sable hue, his eyes black, animated end sparkling. His mental powers a/e strong and calm in acting, and both clear and quick in perceiving. Of his superiority he has given unequivocal proofs in the high military tulent he displayed-for he is active, enterprising, judicious, and by his personal example inspiring the brave with horoism and the timid with resolution-in his letters-in his celebrated address to his King-and, in the manner in which he has borne adversity, calumny and prosperity The qualities of his heart are of a corresling stamp, for he was dutiful and afectionate to his aged parent. He raised and organized an army without money and without support, when surrounded by an setive enemy, and though exposed to great difficulties, and embarrassed by envy, jealousy, intrigue, and mutiny, he was victorious over the experienced commanders and disciplined legions of hostile France In him the great and various qualities are combined which constitute a true patrio and hero. His deeds and his name will be bunded down to the latest ages, and call for the veneration and imitation not only of his countrymen but of mankind."

DR. JOHNSON,

Dr. Anderson, in his tife of this great moralis and lexicographer, after noting his foibles, says, ss With these defects there was, how ever, scarcely a virtue of which he was no in principle possessed. He was humane charitable, affectionate and generous. His most intemperate sullies were the effects of an irritable habit; he offended only to To the warm and active benevohence of his heart, all his friends have borne testimony. " He had nothing," says Goldsmith, " of the bear but his skin. Misfortune had only to form her claim, in order to found her right to the use of his purse, or the exercise of his talents .-His house was an asylum for the unhappy beyond what a regard to personal conve nience would have allowed; and his in come was distributed in the support of his nmates, to an extent greater than general prudence would have permitted. The most norable testimony to his moral and so cial character, is the cordial esteem of his friends and acquaintances. He was known by no man by whom his loss was not regretted."

It will be to the everlasting honour of George the Third, that in the year 1762 he settled a pention of 300% per annum on Dr. Johnson, "as a recompense for the honor which the excellence of its writings, and the henefit which their moral tradency, had been of to Great Britain."

Every lover of agriculture and rural economy, at home, must regret that this charming plant has not yet been fairly tried in Europe, where it would probably yield both profit and pleasure to all its admirers. The roots are esteemed medicinal by the natives, and there can be little doubt of the nutritive quality of the whole plant, considered as the food of animals. It is well known to the Hindoostanees, and probably so often the object of attention, in the rural sports and excursions of the people, or their children, that the expression doob ka h hulla, a ring of doob, is frequently introduced in their stories, to express that a netitioner did not receive a doob ring from the person solicited, or what we might render, be did not even see the colour of As rings are exchanged at wedlings by the parties, it is possible their poverty may sometimes cause them to sub stitute, at least fro tempore, those formed of the grass in question.

PROM THE VILLAGE RECORD.

Steepy Hollow, March 11. fr. Printer. Among your correspondents, I see you ave a great many schemers. Now should like to know if there is any among them that can scheme out a way for a man to live without work, who has no fortune to live on. You must know Mr. Printer, that I am a mechanic; love to live; love to eat; love to drink Farmer's beer, if I can get it; or any beer, rather than go dry; love frolicking prodigiously; but don't love work :-- mortal aversion to it; for if my money be not paid before hand, who knows whether I ever shall get it; perhaps have to dun for it; perhaps be snubbed with a short answer. Well suppose I am paid be fore hand, ten to one the money is spent, and one feels as if he was working for a dead horse. Lotteries I have tried again and again; odd numbers; even numbers; dreamed of numbers; but blank; blank; blatic was still the answer to-" what luck to number such a one?" Some new scheme must be hit on, or poor Lawrence must starve, or what is about as bad, go to work. Pray lay this matter before some of y ur correspondents, and see if some of them cannot find a way to relieve-Sir,

Value of a good name in trade. - Stephen Kemble Filler of a good name in trade.—Stephen Kemble, of enormous rotundity of paunels, happening to pass through Newport market, the butchers set up their usual cry of "What d'ye buy? What 'll ye have!" Stephen parried this for some time, by saying, he did not want any thing. At last, a butcher started from his stall, and eyeing Stephen's forces from the button, which certainly would figure from too to hottom, which certainly would not lead one to think he fed on air, exclaimed. "Well, sir, though you do not now want any thing. only eay you buy your meat of me, and you wil
